The next morning, they hear the song again.

"Tra-la-la! Wake up, sleepy heads!"

The birds look behind the leaves.

They look inside old nests.
They look under the branches.

They look everywhere. But they cannot find the singer.

On the third morning, they hear the song again.

Then they hear a tiny sneeze.

"Achoo!"

The birds turn around.

A little bird peeps out of its nest in the tree.

It has yellow feathers and a sharp beak.

"Hello!" says the little bird.

"My name is Pintu.

I am a weaver bird.

I love to sing.

But sometimes I sneeze!"

All the birds laugh.
